

WHAT IS A BIODECODING OF SYMPTOM'S PRACTITIONERS?

The practitioner in biological decoding of symptoms has completed a certified training recognized by the AIPDBS. Their practice is regularly reevaluated on three criteria: acquisition of knowledge, practical work, personnel development. They work alongside conventional medicines.

1) They have received comprehensive training based on the understanding the connection between symptoms and emotions. They also work on themselves, develop an understanding of their own biological structure, their transgenerational memories and their own limits. In addition to the theoretical and practical learnings, they learn several accompaniment tools (such as Neurolinguistic programming, hypnosis, metaphors, transgenerational, therapy, ...)

They are regularly supervised before being granted certification.

2) They agree to the charter and the code of ethics of the AI-- in order to guarantee a serious professional recognition.

3) They commit to regular supervision (at least twice a year), in order to reframe their therapeutic practice (for instance dealing with transfers and counter-transfers), and to share on practical cases.

The practitioner in Biodecoding focuses on the listening of emotions and physical sensations. This gives the ability to decode the link between emotions and symptoms. Their knowledge and behavior helps them to understand the emotional reality of each patient. They foster change and allow a sense of liberation thus enabling the patient's betterment.
